

confidence in Mr. Adderley, and that so far as the care of his interests was concerned he believed it was to the utmost of his ability, and for it he should ever own himself highly obliged to him.

Mr. Adderley died in Dublin on May 28th, 1791, at his residence in Granby Row, and was buried on the 1st of June in the graveyard of St. Mary's Church, Dublin, where there is a plain stone bearing this inscription:—

Here lieth the Body of
THOMAS ADDERLEY,
Late of Rutland Square, in the City of Dublin, Esq.,
Who departed this life on the 28th of May, 1791.

Justices of the Peace for the County of Cork.

THE late Mr. A. J. Fetherstonhaugh, whose "True Story of the Two Chiefs of Dunboy," in the Journal of the Society of Antiquaries, 1894, formed so striking a contribution to the history of South-West Cork in the last century, had made considerable progress with the compilation of a list of the Justices of the Peace for the county, taken from the Lord Chancellor's Warrants for the issue of Commissions (Crown and Hanaper Office).

This task being unfinished at the time of Mr. Fetherstonhaugh's lamented death, I undertook its completion as far as the year 1800, and prepared the list for publication in the pages of this Journal, in which, I believe, it had been his intention that it should appear. Many of the warrants for such appointments are not now forthcoming, and the catalogue of Justices of the Peace has been supplemented from entries in the Hanaper Day Books, so that in some instances the dates given below are those of the issue of the commissions, and not of the warrants.

The earliest warrant is dated 1661, and some notices of commissions prior to this are prefixed.

H. F. BERRY, Member.

William de Barry, Lord de Barry, a commission of the peace, county Cork, 13 Henry VI., 1434-5 (Ferguson's Calendar, Exchequer Memoranda Rolls).

The Mayor of Cork (for the time being) inserted in a commission of the peace for Munster and Thomond, 2 Aug., 1560 (Fiant, Elizabeth, No. 263, Calendar).

The Earl of Ormonde and Ossory, Gerald Earl of Desmond, the Bishop of Cork, Warham Saint Leger, knight, the Mayor and Recorder of Cork, the Mayor of Youghall, and the Sovereign of Kynsale (for the time being), to be justices, commissioners and keepers of the peace for the county of Cork, etc., 8 March, 1565-6 (Fiant, Elizabeth, No. 828, Calendar).

COMMISSION OF THE PEACE FOR THE SEVERAL COUNTIES OF IRELAND, DATED

to this living idol. By the ancient Greeks this reptile, as the emblem of healing, was assigned to Æsculapius, and it is scarcely necessary to remind our readers of the numerous references in the Bible to the serpent.⁽⁶⁾ Hence it is by no means improbable that the old Irish races migrating from the East brought with them the tradition of the fall of man, distorted by oral repetition and ignorance into the superstitious worship of Athair Nemhe, or the "Father of Poison." Meanwhile, whether there be reason or not to believe the existence of serpent worship during the era of paganism in Ireland, it is very certain that the holy wells and stations dedicated to St. Patrick and various saints are held in much veneration by the Irish peasants, who in language and in customs still preserve many dim traditions, betraying methods of thought peculiar to races of Oriental descent.

(6) That serpent worship was not unknown among the Jews is apparent from one of the Books of Kings, where the brazen serpent erected by Moses in the wilderness to cure the bites inflicted by fiery serpents upon the rebellious Israelites, and which had been preserved in the Temple, was destroyed by Ezechias, who desired to check the very superstitious reverence paid to it by the Hebrews.—iv Kings, ch. 18, v. 4.

LOCAL HISTORY, ANTIQUITIES, FOLK-LORE, ETC.

Contributed by W. : MILITARY EXECUTION IN CORK IN 1801.

Military Execution in Cork in 1801.—The piece of ground between the western end of the Mardyke Walk and the southern branch of the river Lee, and extending from the grounds of the Dyke House (formerly called the Red House, the Mardyke being originally the Red House Walk) to a stream which once ran from the river to the now obliterated south moat of the Mardyke at a point a little nearer the city than the present path leading from the Mardyke opposite the Ferry Walk to the Western Road, was called in the first quarter of the present century "the camp field," because soldiers often exercised in it, and sometimes in the summer camped out in it. It was then a fine open field, for the Western Road was not constructed until many years afterwards. I have often heard my father, who was born in 1801, say that he had frequently heard persons who had been present at the military execution enacted on Tuesday, 30th of June in that year, describe it, and that one of these persons had several times pointed out to him a particular spot in this camp field as approximately the place where the man was shot; and I remember that my father used to say that as well as he could recollect, this spot was a pace or two south of the road wall, and about a dozen paces west of the gateway opening on the causeway which now crosses the field at the river side of the road. The account of the execution given by my father by persons present at it was this:—The condemned man, Joseph America, a private in Baron Hompesch's regiment of (I believe) dragoons, who had been sentenced to death for disobeying orders and firing at his sergeant, was placed facing the Mardyke, and he knelt on his coffin with a handkerchief tied over his eyes. Many soldiers under arms and very many civilians were present. The firing party of (I think) twelve men, in two ranks, commanded by an officer and closely watched by a sergeant, stood where about the middle of the road is now. When the soldiers fired and the man fell forward dead, the people gave a low moaning cry, which was immediately hushed to the stillness of death when the surgeon went forward and stooped over the body. The next minute the troops marched past, the body was thrown into the blood-stained coffin, the cover was nailed down, and the common cart which had carried the wretched man to his doom, hurried away with his corpse. All present agreed that he met death with the greatest firmness. Probably the spot indicated was chosen because opposite that place the bank at the other side of the river rises precipitously into a kind of bluff which would effectually stop any stray bullet. However, I believe that in this instance "every bullet had its billet" in the body of this the last soldier ever shot by order of court-martial in Cork.
